Right, Colin, it sounds like the project might need your input then.

||| Hi All,

|||

||| New group has now started to create a fully stable and secure
||| windows machine. XP vs. 2000

||| This is the first 'dilemma' in a whole series covering the choices
||| to be made in putting together an inexpensive but reliable PC.

||| The basic idea is to discuss each of the various options along the
||| way, decisions being made by consensus or at least majority vote of
||| the participants.

||| The aim of the project will be to install Microsoft Windows onto a
||| PC 'properly' so that it runs reliably and efficiently,
||| eliminating the commonplace woes of re-boots, re-installs, slow
||| running and lost data. As part of the project a PC (actually, more
||| than one) will be constructed (from a large 'parts bin') and
||| photos will be posted of each important detail.

||| Vital to this project will be the contributors – you – either using
||| your previous knowledge and experience to make recommendations or to
||| ask questions. Even if you know absolutely nothing about PCs right
||| now, I'm sure you'll have questions to ask and these will be as

|||| welcome as the answers.

|||| Choices of hardware and installation of the software will follow
|||| later, but the first step is going to be to choose which version of
|||| Microsoft Windows we use.

|||| Congratulations. This is the stupidest thing I ever heard of.

||

|| Really ? How so ?

|| Many people seem to have problems running a Windows PC without
|| various instabilities creeping in. An apparent need for frequent
|| re-boots, occasional re-installs and a machine which appears to slow
|| down with age seem to plague many Windows users – to the extent
|| where some regard these problems as a 'fact of life' which they have
|| to tolerate.

|| Surely an attempt to discover how to avoid these problems and then
|| make that

|| information known can only be a good thing ?

|| Kevin.
