I have a Windows server 2003. I recently replaced all Win98 clients with new XP Professional clients. Users were expecting them to fly. However were grossly disappointed with the time it takes to logon to the domain. It takes about 2 minutes while it does loading your personal settings.... applying your personal settings.... which they did no have on their old Win98 machines. How can this process made quicker?

Do you have roaming profiles turned on? When I tried to use them it slowed down the logon and shutdown a lot. It has to copy the profile to and from the server.
