You know, I feel a little dumb, but thanks for the help Sharon.
I scratched my head and really thought about what I could have done to make this happen, like how can the driver work and my computer be picking it up, and yet it still doesn't work. Then I remember I went into msconfig and for some reason turned stopped one of the services, thinking it was something else... doh!
Sorry for wasting you ppl's time

No problem and no need to apologize! Computers are complex. It's very easy for a little detail to slip through the cracks when trying to troubleshoot a problem. Always start with the basics and work your way up to more complex possibilities.
