Spam-----unsolicited mail/message. Used primarily to sell something. How do you think Symantic earns money?

Pushing any anti-virus programs is spam.

Tush and pish, with a healthy dollop of pshaw.

Kaja was merely making recommendations of anti-virus programs along with anti-malware and cleaning apps.
What's your problem with that?

I'd be interested to hear your reasoning for that statement and what your definition of "spam" is.

Re: IE7

OP reported a slow-down, programs opening unprompted, not closing, an unresponding machine and asked for help.

Kaja responded with a long post recommending three anti-virus solutions (Symantec, Microsoft & Avast), two anti-malware products and a disk cleaner as well as making a few other recommendations.

Whatever you think of the reply's technical content and whatever you think of the products that were recommended (and I personally shun Symantec as much as I can), you're really out of order labelling it as spam.

Unsolicited? Nope. Trying to sell one product? Nah, a variety of products were being recommended. Done primarily to sell something? Give over, he/she was trying their best to help.

Sounds like you've got some sort of axe to grind. Or perhaps you feel for some reason that only freeware products should ever be mentioned here?
