I don't see why MS didn't include an option for auto-sync'ing in the "Internet Time" tab of "Date and Time Properties"

They do. It's automatically synched once a week I recommended a third-party program only for its ability to synch as often as you want, since doing it weekly didn't appear to be often enough for you.

What's the best utility to ensure the system clock is nearly always in sync ?

Sync it to an internet clock often. Do it once an hour, if you require that much accuracy. There are several utilities that do this. I like the freeware tclock (not the similarly-named, but inferior, in my view, tclockex), which does this and several other useful things. --
