My XP auto-updater wants to install service pack 3, which I also want to do. During the installation process, it calls for the original XP installation disk, which I don't have because the XP was factory installed. I also have no idea where the recovery disk is that came with the computer, as I've had this laptop over a year.

How do I override the demand for the original XP OS disk? I do want to install the Service Pack 3 to be up to date.

It's unlikely it is demanding the XP Operating System Disk and more likely it is asking for the Office XP installation media – as there is not SP3 for Windows XP at this date/time.
