

Re: Big hole??

Source:

<http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/WinXP/microsoft.public.windowsxp.customize/2004-09/1433.html>

From: David Candy (david_at_mvps.org)

Date: 09/19/04

Date: Sun, 19 Sep 2004 12:46:15 +1000

Perhaps this is why you should pay experts to set up your computer. There is no problem except users thinking they know what they are doing. This is a USER STUPIDITY problem and has nothing to do with XP.

--

<http://www.uscricket.com>

"User1" <user1@msn.net> wrote in message news:uwD88BfnEHA.392@tk2msftngp13.phx.gbl...

"Windows XP Service Pack 2 with Advanced Security Technologies helps you protect your PC against

As soon as you install SP2 on a Windows XP PC with a certain configuration, your file and print

A number of test scans run by PC-Welt revealed that this in fact is a common configuration and

Already Windows 95 affected by a similar problem

Experienced Windows users may remember that there was a similar problem in the past, specifically

In other words, this caused the service to be released worldwide through the dial-up connection

This in fact is true for Windows XP without Service Pack. Since SP1, this configuration is hard

If you intended to deactivate this firewall, Windows displayed an easily recognizable dialog, but

SP1 + SP2 leads to a catastrophic error

Due to the bug carried over from SP1 as well as a new bug, the firewall configuration with SP2

At the same time, an exception is determined for file and printer sharing: For the internal net

With the first use of the dial-up connection after installing SP2, all of your shared data are

How to correct the problem

It is not advisable to keep this defective default configuration. However, the previous environ

Choose "Windows Firewall" in the in the Windows Control Panel and there the tab "Exceptions

To lock the service to the outside and keep it open for the internal LAN, you have to individua

After these measures, you can be sure to be as safe as you were with SP1. Great, don't you thin