Kelly--

I wasn't that upset, or trying to make a big deal out of this, just a little miffed when Jan kept pushing the "lack of consideration by intent element." I'm pretty familiar with the options tabs, although I can't recite from rote what's on them, but after the first couple messages I double checked to see if there was any stone I was leaving unturned, and why in the world the html formatting bar or whatever you want to call it was showing up. I made sure that I had the two places that address plain text configured for it on the send tab, and went over the "plain text dialogue box" whose options I don't claim to understand perfectly even after seeing them contexted in the IE box--but to make sure that they wouldn't contribute. So what I do if I see the bar is just to go to format and select Plain Text and it goes away.

Another thing that contributed to making html posts was when the html bar was down for whatever reason, I thought that if I wasn't going to do anything but paste a hyperlink, (i.e. not underline or italicize or bold type any words), then even if it had been set on html there would be nothing to show up as html. Obviously, this isn't the case. I understand from David that Ctrl+3 can give you that information and some additional informaiton, but what puzzles me is *what would show as html or cause the bandwidth problems if you didn't have an off-sized font and you didn't do anything else.

Also I know you hae a reason for everything you say, and I was trying to figure out what I didn't appreciate about the step of pasting into notepad. If I'm missing something there, and you can also clarify what shows up as html if the only thing you do is paste a hyperlink, I'd appreciate it.

Chad,

I didn't mean to get you upset. IF your settings were as you claim a week or so ago, this would not be happening, thus my thinking it was third party. IF and when you see the html bar appear, it means that you will be posting to the like, thus your settings aren't as you claimed.

As for attachments, that is different than posting html. Attachments can be included via plain text and are on rare occasions here.
