

Re: Windows XP sevice pack 2

Source:

<http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/WinXP/microsoft.public.windowsxp.general/2004-08/8360.html>

From: Byron Hinson (byron_at_activewin.com)

Date: 08/08/04

Date: Sun, 8 Aug 2004 19:31:01 +0100

It's no where near 480mb in size. For normal home users you are looking around 80mbs.

--

Byron Hinson
Microsoft MVP

<http://www.activewin.com>

"fatDave" <fatDave@discussions.microsoft.com> wrote in message news:9DAD23B6-5057-4363-896D-A6C6C3435DAE@microsoft.com...

> Whilst we all know that XP is the most stable OS to date, there are times > when one may need to re-install the OS from scratch - with this in mind, > plus > the fact that service pack 2 is rumoured to be approx. 480mb in size, I > was > wondering if Microsoft are planning to make a 'FULL' download available to > those of us lucky enough to have high bandwith connections. As I for one > do > not wish to have to re-download XPSP2 if I ever have to re-install the > OS -
> this would be easier if I could download SP2 and burn it to CD.
>
> Some kind of reply through this forum would be appreciated...