

Re: End to end test performance

Source:

<http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/WinXP/microsoft.public.windowsxp.general/2004-12/0360.html>

From: Johnny (Johnny_at_discussions.microsoft.com)

Date: 11/30/04

Date: Tue, 30 Nov 2004 12:27:04 -0800

I have a DOS application running on a Win98 box with MS LANMAN network. Each Win98 (DOS) machine has a static IP address. The problem is sometimes the application hangs. That's why I would like to have the time and date on the ping log report. This way I can find out if the "No Response" happens, the date and time will match with the DOS application crashes time.

JC

"Don Taylor" wrote:

```
> =?Utf-8?B?Sm9obm55?= <Johnny@discussions.microsoft.com> writes:
> >Can ping give me the date and time?
>
> >JC
>
> >I'm not certain exactly what you need but it seems that some sort > >of batch file in the CMD shell with the date and time commands > >along with ping, or using the Windows task scheduler, might let > >you write a dozen lines and get this done. Or other scripting > >tools can do similar things with similar effort.
>
> >"Don Taylor" wrote:
> >> =?Utf-8?B?Sm9obm55?= <Johnny@discussions.microsoft.com> writes:
> >> >Is there a software out there that can capture data send/receive > >> >in an end to end test performance. I am looking for a software > >> >that can set the packet size, time period (minute, hour, days).
> >> >It's a kind of network analyzer troubleshooter.
> >>
> >> ping /?
>
```