

Re: how do I find my username

Source:

<http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/WinXP/microsoft.public.windowsxp.general/2004-12/11651.html>

From: Malke (malke_at_nospoonnotreally.com)

Date: 12/17/04

Date: Thu, 16 Dec 2004 20:30:57 -0800

deez wrote:

> I apologize for the frustration and confusion I must be causing you.
> Perhaps I wasn't clear enough in my descriptions of the problems I'm > encountering with my computer. My husband did only upgrade, but as a > result a few items were missing and are as follows. 3 folders within > my main folder with I kept all my saved items. There were originally > about 12 but only 3 are actually missing. I also lost my favorites > that were saved, email addresses and various emails that are needed.
> These things are items I cannot replace because I did not develop > them into photos yet. Maybe my use of "files" instead of "folders" was > wrong. I hope this makes much more sense to you, but if not I am sorry > to have wasted your time. I just really would hate to not have that > many pieces of my work missing.
>

You're not wasting my time, but you have to remember that you need to describe your situation so someone who can't see your computer can grasp the issues. Since you can see some of your work but not all, then my suggestion still remains: do nothing more on the computer. Take it to a good local professional and have them run data recovery software on it to recover your missing files. It is extremely important that you do nothing more on the computer if you want to recover this data.

After the data is retrieved by the professional, have them show you how to back up using a cd burner.

Good luck,

Malke

--

MS-MVP Windows User/Shell
Elephant Boy Computers
www.elephantboycomputers.com
"Don't Panic"