They are also available on a continuous basis at www.isnoop.net. I suggest you use an e-mail alias to receive the Gmail invite and then kill it afterward. This will prevent covert spammers from getting your true e-mail address through Gmail invites. I use Sneakemail.com to create e-mail aliases but there are other services, like Trashmail.net where the e-mail alias gets automatically disabled after the first incoming e-mail (so you only get the invite or confirmation and that's all you'll get through that temporary self-destruct e-mail alias).
