Yet.

As a server OS where it is a major player Linux is more often hacked the Windows Servers.

LOL! I only use OE with addons that make it a very good text-based newsreader. For binaries, I use Agent.

And replying to ignoramuses and zealots take very little time at all.

As is most of the Linux documentation I've seen.

Since I can't even boot to a Linux live CD distro what good is freeware equivalents of software that I'm already using with Windows on a OS that don't work on my computer?

Now you are gonna blame me, or my hardware, but the fact is, the latest versions of Windows desktop OS and Server OS actually work with my computer. Linux does NOT!

Linux is not ready yet as a Windows replacement for the masses, and until it is, it will be a server OS and an OS of geeks and hobbyists.
