

Re: Default user –user profile?

Source:

<http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/WinXP/microsoft.public.windowsxp.general/2006-03/msg06534.html>

- From: Graeme <Graeme@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx>
 - Date: Thu, 16 Mar 2006 03:40:29 -0800
-

Setting up a user with all the program defaults you want, then cloning it onto the Default User is about the only way to setup programs that are "User specific". It is a great way to setup a default setup for things like WMP that ask your users all sorts of questions when they first use it.

However, it is only really practical at the build phase of a roll-out, as you will need to delete existing user's profiles from "My Computer – Properties – Advanced – User Profiles" for the new default profile you create to come into effect.

Hope this helps.

:o)

"William Stokes" wrote:

I Agree.

What about application settings? Are there application settings in Application Data folder? (Probably depends on installed apps :)

My goal is (or atleast one goal is) to disable automatic application online updates by default in the program settings and use these settings for all users.

Thats because so many applications today has some web update component activated by default. I don't want our users to update their software and in most cases thats not even possible due to insufficient privileges. It's just annoying that the user is prompted several times for all kinds of available online updates.

Thanks
–Will

Re: Default user –user profile?

"gerryR" <gerryrminus@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx> kirjoitti
viestissä:eXLjjMCSGHA.4300@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx

That is one way all right, another way (I think a better way) is to add the favourites, shortcuts etc to the "All Users" profile.

hth
gerryR

"William Stokes" <will@xxxxxxxxxxxx> wrote in message
news:%23498L9BSGHA.2536@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx

Hello,

Is the default user profile for distributing files & settings for users logging on to the workstation?

If I configure 1 user profile and copy the profile's files under Documents and Setting to the Default user folder are they copied to new user profiles logging in to the wo