Any time you purchase anything on an auction site, the risk rests with you, the buyer. If it turns out the seller is not offering a "genuine" version of Windows XP, then you'll have to deal strictly with the seller for any recourse. As the saying goes, "Buyer Beware"!

| Hi!

| I'm building a computer from second hand parts.

| I don't have much money but after saying that, I don't want to go down the

| eBay is full of XP software, like this:

| Am I taking a risk? Price is good (I've seen some even cheaper!) and the guy

| Are offers like this too good to be true?

| Any advice before I take the plunge would be appreciated!

| Many thanks,
