

Re: Valid Product Keys for Windows XP SP2 Professional Volume License Edition

Source:

<http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/WinXP/microsoft.public.windowsxp.general/2006-11/msg02964.html>

- From: Alias <aka@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx>
 - Date: Thu, 09 Nov 2006 18:28:27 +0100
-

Gregg Hill wrote:

Software piracy is no different than someone who walks into your house and steals your computer, TV, jewels, etc. It is THEFT. I'll bet you would be upset if someone stole YOUR belongings, but you seem to think it is OK to do just because Bill has more money than you do.

Um, in the country where I live, sharing software is called "fair use" and is not illegal at all as long as there is no financial gain. Oops. In the USA, if you copy XP that you paid for, it is NOT theft but copyright violation, a civil, not criminal, offense.

Don't be such an unscrupulous person.

Gregg

Get off your high moral horse and do some research before you stick your hoof in your mouth again.

Alias

"Alias" <aka@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx> wrote in message
<news:%23W9WtGCBHHA.4892@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx>

Bruce Chambers wrote:

nt2000_xp1997@xxxxxxxxxxxxx wrote:

These keys have been reported few times in June, but are still valid up to this moment !!

Re: Valid Product Keys for Windows XP SP2 Professional Volume License Edition

Well, we'll see. Microsoft can't do much about the contents of Chinese web sites, but they can, if they so desire, disable those keys.

They don't desire to do that. They are still saturating the Chinese market.

In the meantime, let's hope that Microsoft at least prosecutes you for aiding and abetting in software piracy.

That'll be the day! MS take someone to court to uphold their scammy EULA?
Give me a break.

Alias