

Systemn Mechanic 7 Professional sucks!

Source:

<http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/WinXP/microsoft.public.windowsxp.general/2007-02/msg04869.html>

- From: mginat@xxxxxxxxxx
 - Date: 14 Feb 2007 17:33:55 -0800
-

I posted below in response to someone who said never to use registry cleaners that are advertised on google etc. I'm curious to know if anyone has anything good to say about Sys Mechanic 7. I'm not usually one to complain but this experience has really ticked me off.

"I purchased this piece of garbage from Best Buy, hoping to resolve some problems I was having with the underperforming HP desktop I bought last December. I thought the AMD dual core processor would be an improvement over my 2 yr old laptop. I saw no difference, in fact the laptop is more reliable.

According to the advertising on the cover Iolo's product has one many awards and is also a virus protector and firewall. I had to turn off the firewall, now the virus protector gives me an error message at startup. I turned on the windows firewall and every now and then get a message that I have no firewall on.

How do these people get away with it? I will never buy anything from Best Buy again after this, nor HP.

One hilarious feature of this program, it tells you that you have a critical error in that there are some files to clean up. First of all that should not be a critical error, they are just Internet Cache files etc. Second, if you click on "remove" it starts removing, then gets to say 39% done and the program hangs ROFL! One time I had to do a hard reboot to get the computer to start up again, sometimes you click on the System Mechanic icon and nothing happens. In that case I had to reinstall the program, probably losing one of the 3 licences it comes with. Oh and by the way after reanalyzing the computer those few hundred megabytes come back again as a critical problem to resolve. Of course I contacted technical help and they sent me a link to their FAQs etc. which I had already looked at. Then I had to email them again and am still waiting for a response.

I blame the people who give these programs awards, and then Best Buy and others for not looking into it. You can't return opened software so they should make sure they are not selling dud programs like Sys Mechanic 7."