It was not my "imagination"! They said (again) it was a "version 10" update!
Is this fact getting lost somewhere here?

| Thank you Shenan but... that IS exactly how my system IS set up right now!
| That is exactly how every other update I get notifications about is treated.
| The problem is with THIS particular Microsoft update! THEY have chosen, for
| some reason, to send it out without ANY option to read anything about it
| first. Also, why do they dishonestly disguise it as a "version 10" update?

So, if I understand correctly you accepted an update to your computer that you did not get "ANY option to read anything about" and now you're mad because it wasn't what you imagined it might be? I can understand your consternation, obviously this is someone else's fault.

In any event restoring from your most recent disk image or backup should put the situation right.
