Because its unsigned doesnt necessarily mean it will screw your sys. It simply means the supplier hasnt paid MS pots of dosh to get it signed, hence the sys warning.

I am running Win XP SP2 on an HP Pavilion DV8000 laptop.

I have just tried to install a dirt cheap web cam that I got for christmas, I knew it was going to be trouble before I started. It is a Clas Ohlson (Swedish shop own brand) Model TWC-30AP.

Basically while trying to install the drivers and some preliminary software Windows threw up the message that this software did not have a Windows Logo certificate approval (or something). I therefore took Windows advice and cancelled the installation.

However now when I go "Start-All Programs" I have something called "PC VGA Camer@". There are 2 sub options "AmCap" and "Uninstall". What concerns me is that Uninstall does nothing. The Installshield wizard pops up briefly, but doesn't actually remove this. I cannot find the item to remove from the Control Panel-Add Remove Hardware section. I have even tried reverting to the last 2 points in System Restore which did nothing as it said nothing had changed.

Yet I can see this program option available. How do I remove it all so that it will not stuff up Windows as was hinted at.

Thanks for your help and best wishes over the festive season.
