Out of the blue it started with the problem, xp wanted to install a fax, and if I closed those windows then i could continue working with my computer. It got worse and I managed to save my data and finally I gave it the file that xp was requesting Fax.cab I believe (got it from hp printer software) and then we got to a new dimension of problem: it would freeze after several minutes into the booting problem. I figured a software problem so as I had my data saved i did a recovery of my computer which basically formats the HD and downloads the original software. Didn't work, did it again, rebooted a few times and finally it worked. Rebooted it a few more times and worked fine. Thought I had beaten the problem but after I downloaded some of my data the problem persisted. Next day I did another recovery using again the original recovery disks to rule out my data and the problem exists. Basically, if the process finishes the booting process it works perfectly. Most of the time 90% it freezes.

I can start it in safe mode but don't know what else to do. Right now it is working like a charm ... until I restart it again. Anyone can assist?? Robert
