SP3 seems to improve performance (those are the TechBeta testers' reports) and networking is better. I like it better than SP2 for those reasons. You'll probably pick up 5% to 10% in performance in some tasks. Depends on what you do.

First mention I've seen of a real benefit. Thanks. I am surprised, though, that MS would spend time on what they believe is an obsolete O/S trying to speed it up.
