My computer has a problem that has been discussed in the past. It seems very complex. It keeps restarting itself, sometimes before it even loads. I get error reports, and when I send them, a new webpage opens saying something about the error report being corrupted due to a serious problem with my software or hardware. The steps say to go to remove any new programs I've installed, but not only will the add/remove programs thing not load, but I haven't even added anything new to my computer for quite some time! This problem seemed to start right after I USB connected a digital photo frame to the computer. It didn't load any software that I'm aware of. Sometimes I try to get through reading the whole instructions on fixing the problem, but my computer restarts again. I've installed XP Service Pack 3, I just installed PC Tools Spyware Doctor and found a Trojan.Virtuemonde virus which I've since removed, and I've checked the computers registry with RegistryFix7. When the dialog box pops up indicating that my computer has experienced a serious error, I try to click on "don't send report" and it keeps popping up. I believe it has something to do with my wireless network card because when I disable the wireless network connection, I don't get the error message and my computer doesn't randomly restart. Can someone help me with this problem? :-( Thank you !
