

Re: XP Professional --Lost Domain & Won't Login URGENT

Source:

http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/WinXP/microsoft.public.windowsxp.help_and_support/2004-02/4533.html

From: Colin Nash [MVP] (cnash-REMOVETHIS-_at_mvps.org)

Date: 02/17/04

Date: Mon, 16 Feb 2004 20:51:25 -0500

You will need to contact your IT department/network administrator.

He is going to have to tell you the password to a local account on that system, such as the built-in "Administrator" account. Domain accounts are irrelevant at this point.

If he takes his job seriously and follows some kind of security guideline he will refuse to give you this information and you'll have to bring it in for him to re-add you to the domain.

--

Colin Nash

Microsoft MVP

Windows Printing/Imaging/Hardware

<mzbpayne@comcast.net> wrote in message

news:d51a28d9.0402161745.3904a90@posting.google.com...

> Your prompt help is greatly appreciated.

>

> I have my work laptop at home. I have done something that now prevents > me from rebooting and login in with username/password.

>

> The alert at startup tells me that either my user/pass is wrong or the > domain is wrong. The user/pass is correct, so I must have altered the > domain.

>

> Now I cannot login. I have tried rebooting with F8 pressed down and > restarting with the last working configuration...no luck.

>

> What do you suggest? I really appreciate any help.