

RE: clock synchronization

Source:

http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/WinXP/microsoft.public.windowsxp.help_and_support/2004-07/3839.html

From: BAR (BAR_at_discussions.microsoft.com)

Date: 07/13/04

Date: Mon, 12 Jul 2004 23:03:03 -0700

You can select from several servers.

I use time.windows.com and have no issues with updates.

Your personal firewall [Norton's?] should always prompt you if it is to block a site or programme access for the first time: I'd expect that it will not cause you any concerns.

"Bernt" wrote:

> Windows XP seem to include a clock synchronization > function. In my computer the time server is set as > time.nist.gov. However, it does not seem to work. When > using the update button there is a response according to > which there is a problem with connecting to the time > server. Is this caused by my personal firewall? I have also > tried atomic clock sync. Here manual updates work, but not > automatic synchronization.
>