Presumably.

Although I'm a little surprised that you'd have to ask this question. I'd have thought that anyone paying thousands of dollars a year for an MSDN subscription (the ONLY legitimate means of downloading Microsoft products) would already know about such things. After all, the MSDN (Microsoft Software Developers Network) is intended for people who are advanced users developing programs and applications for use with Microsoft products.

If you obtained the FrontPage *.ISO from any source other than MSDN, be advised that:

- 1) It is pirated (stolen, to be blunt) software. If you use it, that also makes you a thief, and could even make you liable to civil penalties of up to $50,000.00 USD.
- 2) It quite likely will not activate, nor will you be allowed to download/install and necessary patches to it.
- 3) It comes from an illegitimate source, so it's also likely to contain malware such as viruses, spyware, keystroke loggers, etc. Remember, whoever's distributing this illegitimate software has already demonstrated his/her complete lack of integrity; how could you possibly trust him to provide a safe "product?"
