

Re: sysfader.exe

Source:

http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/WinXP/microsoft.public.windowsxp.help_and_support/2005-02/10753.html

From: Karl (karlb65_at_nospamcomcast.net)

Date: 02/26/05

Date: Sat, 26 Feb 2005 15:50:16 -0500

>From a post at www.wildersecurity.com

Sysfader is not a virus. It seems to be installed with nVidia drivers. My display driver is provided by nVidia. It offers all kinds of options and one of them is the culprit. The solution is Go to START > CONTROL PANEL > DISPLAY > NVIDIA NVIEW DESKTOP MANAGER > tab DESKTOP MANAGEMENT > PROPERTIES > tab APPEARANCE > EFFECTS and uncheck the FADE EFFECT option. God knows what it does but unchecking it solves the problem.

"EasyFeelings" <no@way.com> wrote in message news:745Ud.15483$Sa6.10172@fe2.columbus.rr.com...

> have a client who has been having a problem with their computer freezing and > rebooting. this is an WinXP system, fresh installed to a bigger harddrive > and added a new NIC.
> problem started about a week or so after the fresh install, and in trying to > track down the problem i noticed SYSFADER.exe in the running apps, only > noticed it once and was unable to locate it anywhere on the drive after > that.
> guess the question is: does anyone know what SYSFADER.exe is?
>
> Well first I guess I should let you know, I did that search and found no > real info before I posted.
> All I found was a lot of people with grief from SYSFADER, and no actual > answers.
> I tried the ideas I found there, some had been done before this started, > such as hibernate being shut off, I also tried the transition one. i have > run highjackthis, A/V programs, and spybot search & destroy, even tried > searching for "sysfader" (including hidden files), and this computer doesn't
> use MSN IM.
> This is why i posted a request for help.
> I hoped that someone in this NG would have knowledge about this.
>
>