It is likely your computer is infected with malware. Here is a link where you can find some information on how to find and remove it.

Ok thanks
maybe you have an idea of what the problem may be?
I really don't know what to do.

I don't know if it very clear what I explain.
The idea is that I have usually some problems with my computer..
(like internet freezing suddenly and having to reboot my
computer
with the power button because it is completely bloqued)

Re: Strange events

I'm looking for a solution everywhere and today I looked at the EVENT VIEWER
and I found one thing that I don't know if it's a virus, something strange or not.

In the Event Viewer – Applications

I find everyday several times an event called "Back web plug in – xxxx" (xxxx= a series of numbers.
The description of the event is
1. service started
or
2. No logged in user, launching client as system.

The event has the number I.D. event : 2
Type : Informations
User: N/A

What I noticed is that the series of numbers after Back web plug in
was always the same before I had a problem with my LNK
and EXE
programs.
And now that the problem seems to be solved the series of numbers is different.
I don't know what does this mean?

To "solve " the problem I've installed some files from doug knox
installed a new version of my antivirus.

Sorry for writing so long, but I try to have an answer to my problem.
I don't know what to do.

Thank you if someone can help me printer software, camera software, and more. It is sometimes flagged as spyware by some aggressive anti-spyware programs. It can be used as spyware but it is more commonly a legitimate program. It probably was installed with some new software you installed.
