

Network account lockout

Source:

http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/WinXP/microsoft.public.windowsxp.network_web/2004-02/2852.html

From: Hank (hkloha-junk-_at_comcast.net)

Date: 02/17/04

Date: Tue, 17 Feb 2004 10:02:54 -0800

I think you're exactly right about the cause. Here's how to fix:

Go to Control Panel, then User Accounts. Open your account. At top left of that window is a link to "Manage my Network Passwords". Open that link, you'll see a list of networks, either delete the one for your office, or open it and enter the new password.

Regards,
Hank

>-----Original Message-----
>My apologies if this has been asked before.
>
>I have a laptop running a personal copy of WinXP Pro.
>Recently, when I take it to work and try to access >resources that require authentication my network account >gets locked (MS domain type network).
>
>The problems first appeared when I changed my network >password. Does XP cache passwords? Is it trying my old >password to authenticate which after three tries locks my >account? Can I purge the cached passwords if they exist?
>
>Thanks,
>
>Morgan
>
>