

Re: Hubs work, switch does not

Source:

http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/WinXP/microsoft.public.windowsxp.network_web/2004-06/2481.html

From: Mark Dormer (markd_at_mvpsx.org)

Date: 06/18/04

Date: Fri, 18 Jun 2004 19:40:00 +1000

This can be due to cabling.

I have seen it before, a cable that worked with a 10 mbps hub doesn't with a 100 mbps switch.

Try changing leads

Regards

Mark Dormer

"Bernie" <anonymous@discussions.microsoft.com> wrote in message news:1e12c01c454d8$0a319ff0$a501280a@phx.gbl...

>I have a client with a small network of 7 PCs. One of the > machines running XP Pro runs a database that all the > other machines connect to. They have 2 small hubs > connected together to put everyone on the network. Users > were complaining about slow network speed so I replaced > the hubs with a 16 port switch. After restarting > everything only 2 machines could communicate with others > on the network. I reinstalled the hubs and all was > working again. What gives?? It was a Neatgear 10/100 > switch, the network has mostly XP Pro machines and a > couple of Win 98 computers. Any ideas?
>
> Thanks