

Re: Can connect to network, not internet

Source:

http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/WinXP/microsoft.public.windowsxp.network_web/2004-09/4329.html

From: Tony Allen (tony.all_at_nbc.net)

Date: 09/26/04

Date: Sat, 25 Sep 2004 17:07:42 -0700

How does the computer connect to the internet – when it does? Dial? Cable modem? DSL? Wireless to a router then out?

Have you tried just the internet connection with the problem computer NOT connected to any other network – straight out as a stand alone system?

"Jake" <anonymous@discussions.microsoft.com> wrote in message news:39b301c4a35a$67c7fbc0$a601280a@phx.gbl...

> Still didn't work.

>

> >-----Original Message-----

> >Disconnect from any and all networks – unplug cables, > >unplug wireless

> >adapters (whichever applies).

> >

> >Go to your Network connection properties and uninstall > >everything (make a > >list first) on the 'This connection used the following > >items list'.

> >Reboot. Turn it off. Reboot. Now go back and > >reinstall all the items > >you uninstalled. Turn off computer. Connect your > >network (cable, > >wireless – whatever).

> >Turn on computer and let XP do it's thing.

> >

>