

Re: Windows XP Network setup problem

Source:

http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/WinXP/microsoft.public.windowsxp.network_web/2004-12/2410.html

From: Scott J (ScottJ_at_discussions.microsoft.com)

Date: 12/23/04

Date: Wed, 22 Dec 2004 17:55:03 -0800

Carey,

Thanks for responding. Actually, I did everything that was on your website.

The one thing I didn't do, that I just did, was to uninstall a software firewall that came with the computer. Since I did the unistallation and re-booted, I can now see the shared folders but I can't access them. The folders are also saying that I might not have permission to access them and check with the admin. I checked the folders and the file shareing is turned on for each folder. Any ideas???

"Carey Holzman" wrote:

> www.careyholzman.com/net1.htm
>
> Carey
>
> "Scott J" <ScottJ@discussions.microsoft.com> wrote in message
> news:7E6245C9-974C-4A95-9B89-D68813DFAD2F@microsoft.com...
>> Hello everyone. I am trying to set up a home network and I am running >> into a >> problems. I am running 2 computers, one has XP Pro and the other has XP >> home >> edition. The first computer running XP pro is connected to a Linxsys >> Wireless G router by a cat 5 cable. The second machine is connected to >> the >> network, wirelessly, by a Lynksis USB NIC. Ironically, the computer >> running >> wirelessly can see the workgroup with both computers. The first computer >> can >> see the workgroup name, but can't see the other computer. When I click on >> the workgroup I get an error message stating (The network is not >> accessible >> you might not have permission to use this network resource. Contact the >> admin of this server to find out if you have access permission. Network >> path >> was not found.) I have tried everythink I can think of. Also, is should >> mention that the workgroup names match.

microsoft.public.windowsxp.network_web: Re: Windows XP Network setup problem

> >

> > Any help would be greatly appreciated.

> >

> > Thanks,

> >

> > Scott J

>

>

>

>