

Re: SP2 and Active-X

Source:

http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/WinXP/microsoft.public.windowsxp.perform_maintain/2005-08/msg00997.htm

- From: "cquirke (MVP Windows shell/user)" <cquirkenews@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx>
 - Date: Thu, 25 Aug 2005 15:01:28 +0200
-

On Tue, 23 Aug 2005 14:09:38 -0500, "~ FreeSpirit ~"
>"Ted Ziegler" <teddyz@xxxxxxxxxxxxx> wrote in message

>> "You cannot install some updates or programs"
>> <http://support.microsoft.com/kb/822798/>
>=====

>I can't see any connection between this information and the warning I now >get when I want to install the Active-X from HP's website. How do I get RID >of that SP2 warning thing in I.E.?
>
>Cat roots etc? I don't even understand the terminology at that site. That >page tells you to do things technicians are qualified to do, not average PC >users such as myself. If I mess the the cat roots I have no one here to >help fix my PC.
>
>Can you please just tell me how to STOP this SP2 I.E. warning window from >coming up when I try to download an active X?

One way is to put the relevant HP site into your list of URLs in the Trusted Zone (IE, Tools, Options, Security, Trusted Zone).

ActiveX controls can be lethal. I would strongly advise against allowing all web sites to drop arbitrary ActiveX controls on your PC. You may well wish you could go back to a working system with annoying warnings, after being nailed by commercial malware and sometimesworse, delivered through ActiveX intrusions.

>-----
>Drugs are usually safe. Inject? (Y/n)
>-----
>.

-
- Follow-Ups:
 - ◆ Re: SP2 and Active-X

Re: SP2 and Active-X

◇ From: ~ FreeSpirit ~

• References:

- ◆ SP2 and Active-X
◇ From: ~ FreeSpirit ~
- ◆ Re: SP2 and Active-X
◇ From: Ted Ziegler
- ◆ Re: SP2 and Active-X
◇ From: ~ FreeSpirit ~

- Prev by Date: Re: USB 1.0 alert
- Next by Date: Re: 100% cpu usage
- Previous by thread: Re: SP2 and Active-X
- Next by thread: Re: SP2 and Active-X
- Index(es):
 - ◆ Date
 - ◆ Thread