

Blue Screen c0000135, again

Source:

http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/WinXP/microsoft.public.windowsxp.setup\_deployment/2004-08/3210.html

---

From: sam (sam0ash_at_btinternet.com)

Date: 08/28/04

Date: Sat, 28 Aug 2004 16:25:44 -0700

hi again Finger Dance

I should have mentioned the "Repair" option did not ask for the admin password. It did a clean-cut job of an "install" but it was not an initial install and remembered all the settings. It did ask for the Product Code but that's fair enough.

Pleased to hear you sorted it out – all the best from the UK.

sam

>-----Original Message-----

>Thank you Sam,

>

>I figured since I forgot my Admin password, I installed

a >new WinXP on the same drive, different directory. I then >move the SAM files to C: drive, and boot onto Recovery

>mode using WinXP CD again. This time around, Recovery >doesn't ask for password and I can just uninstall SP2, >boot up onto the second WinXP, move the SAM files back, >restart to older WinXP and it works.

>

>This sounds like very common bug of SP2. Wish it'll be >fixed soon.

>

>Finger Dance

>

>>-----Original Message-----

>>Hi

>>

>>I had the same problem with a Dell Dimension desktop. I >>managed to get around it by creating a slipstream

>version >>of XP and SP2 and creating a new bootable CD. Then I microsoft.public.windowsxp.setup_deployment: Blue Screen c0000135, again

did

>>a "Repair" of the existing XP installation by booting

>>from the new CD and going thru the setup process

>>until I got to the "Repair existing XP..." and >>pressing "R". Amazingly it worked!!! And I didn't lose >>anything – or at least I haven't noticed anything yet.

>>

>>http://www.winsupersite.com/showcase/windowsxp\_sp2\_slips

t

>r