Yes, that is what I thought but then I found this and I wondered if there had been some monkeying around. Please understand that I do not condone this.

I am trying to understand this better for volunteering in the malware removal forums. I thought person may have tried to convert to domain or malware had messed up the user profile.

How to join a domain in Windows XP Home Edition

Why does the user profile folders only have the .domain or can that be something else like computer name. How do you get the .domain after the profiles? or is that the .domain?

I have Windows XP Pro and no domains set up and none of my user profiles look like the following:

The user profile are:
Susan.Computerroom (admin)
David.Computerroom (admin)
CHILDREN.Computerroom (admin)
Administrator (admin)

=====

It can do with Computername...
You could have just as easily seen...

username.0000
username.0001
