

Group Policy

Source:

http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/Windows/microsoft.public.windows.group_policy/2004-07/0228.html anonymous_at_discussions.microsoft.com

Date: 07/16/04

Date: Fri, 16 Jul 2004 04:41:40 -0700

Ahhh! Turns out even though I removed the templates from the Global GP, it "remembered" the settings I had set. I needed to add teh templates again, then set everything to Not Configured, then wait for a global refresh of the policy, then take off the admin templates until I can do some more testing and convince the PTB that this would be good in the long run! ;)

Will

>-----Original Message-----

>I already did a post, but I pressed enter for a new line, >and it posted the post before I finished!

>

>Anyway, the list of things I did was:

>1. Edited the domain Group Policy... this was a mistake >because we have global sites, and I wanted only to do

>London.

>2. Removed edited templates from the global GP.

>3. Edited the London GP, and after 30 minutes or so, >things started changing. This is good!

>4. After a day or so, realised I really need to change >back, so I set EVERYTHING to "Not Configured", given the >quote below from the Windows 2003 Office 2003 Group

>Policy document:

>

>*Not configured

> The policy is not enforced. If the policy was > previously enforced, those settings are removed from > the registry and the option returns to either the > default setting or the last setting specified by the > user.

>

>Still no joy, and hence my post.

>

>Now, I did set some settings in the domain policy before

>I realised my mistake and removed the templates...

before

>I changed everything to Not Configured... will this have >had a residual effect, perhaps? How can I fix this?

>

>Thanks in advance,

>

>Will

>

>.

>