

Re: LogOff Script

Source:

http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/Windows/microsoft.public.windows.group_policy/2004-08/0248.html

From: Brian S. Cook (brian.cook_at_bnsf.com)

Date: 08/11/04

Date: Wed, 11 Aug 2004 12:24:34 -0700

That is correct, as I do not want the it to apply to anything other than one specific OU, which all of the computer will be attached/placed into.

Thanks for the info, and we will definatly be looking into this one.

Brian

>-----Original Message-----

>Brian-

>If I follow correctly it sounds like you're asking if there is a way to have >a logon script apply to particular machines? In that case, loopback policy >is what you want. Enable loopback processing in a GPO linked to your OU and >then associate the logon script with that loopback GPO.

>

>

>--

>Darren Mar-Elia

>MS-MVP-Windows Management

><http://www.gpoguy.com>

>

>

>

>"Brian Cook" <brian.cook@bnsf.com> wrote in message

>news:42e101c47fbb$1a4c81d0$a501280a@phx.gbl...

>> We are setting up a new domain with a specific user

logon

>> for around 100 plus workstations that will

AutoAdminLogon

>> in a Kiosk type environment.

>>

>> I have created a batch file that will modify the registry

>> setting for AutoAdminLogon entry back to a "1" so that >> the DefaultUser will log back in.

>>
>> What I want to do is set a GPO so that if the >> Administrator account performs the Shift Override so that >> that account can get a login prompt vice having the >> DefaultUser login, and then reset it back so that when >> the Administrator logs off it will set the flag back to >> a "1".
>>
>> My batch file will do this, however I do not want the >> batch file to apply to the Servers in the Domain, only to >> the workstations in a specific OU.
>>
>> Thanks,
>>
>>
>
>
>
>