I agree with your post, but based on the other posts it isn't clear what Yvonne wants to do. I took the original post at face value of "set a group policy to remove domain users and only add domain admins to local group administrators on workstations", which translates in my brain as a full reset where the only 2 members of the local administrators group is built-in\administrator and Domain Admins. So I stand by my original answer of restricted group policy until such time as Yvonne clarifies what the end result should be.

In a Windows 2003 domain, I would use a restricted groups GPO. Since you didn't mention SP levels of operating systems involved, take a peek at:
<http://support.microsoft.com/kb/228496>
<http://support.microsoft.com/kb/810076>

That is probably not workable in this case, since poster must remove specific domain users from membership, but likely does not want to remove all local accounts (which may vary per machine).
If poster wants precisely the same membership in Administrators group of all machines under sway of each GPO, then yes, this route would work.

Re: localgroup administrators

add domain
admins to local group administrators on workstations. Mixed xp and 2000
environment. W2k3 server. I am trying to use net localgroup administrators
/add and /delete.
Using a startup script with only test computers having read access. What variable can I use for the domain users, and will this work? Is there a script for this?
