Regarding the following suggestion from the page you referenced,

'add <!-- saved from url=(0023)<http://www.contoso.com/> --> to a Web page, where the (0023) value is the string length of your URL that follows it and Contoso is the name of your Web site. '

- o does this apply when we're talking about pages from my local machine where the protocol is 'file:/' rather than 'http://'?
- o which web page should it be placed on?
- o given that it refers to my local directory, what constitutes the 'name of my web site'?
- o I presume that the comments should be included as well?

BTW, the implied extreme step of enabling Allow active content to run in files on My Computer does appear to work.

Thanks in advance,
David

David,

The steps listed at <http://www.winxptutor.com/lmzunlock.htm> are the official workarounds. Did the information help, or you're looking for some other methods?

The one article at that site that addresses this issues simply instructs me to do what I've already done. Any other thoughts?
