Hi Jean-David :-)

Jan,

Thanks for your concern and reply. After much despair, I found that part of the problem with IE was with a winsock dll , a winsock32 and a kernel32.dll. Fortunately, my avast antivirus had saved a copy of all which allowed me to replace them. IE ambles along albeit without the mouse right click that enables the image toolbar although that is enabled in the advanced options. I guess I'll have to live with that. Life with Windows sure is interesting and sleep depriving (Smile).

Yes...agreed Windows is interesting....and sleep depriving. But, one of the reasons I hang out here. <very big grin>

I'm still looking for a solution.

Me too. When you find it, I hope you will post back here and let us all know what it was. <Smile>

Hi Steve :-)

A full Cache can often cause download problems, first try the following:

Clearing the Temporary Internet Cache – Safely Delete the Temporary Internet Files

and

Try IEFix:
<http://windowsxp.mvps.org/IEFIX.htm>

If still no joy, try a system restore to a date and time prior to installing the Windows Defender Beta, and see if that will help. If that is not possible, or does not resolve the problem, then try a repair of your OS. You can try the INF method, or the following.

It is a simple repair, but, either way, I strongly suggest that you back up any valuable data first.

Hope this helps.

When I try to download a file using 'save target as' in IE6 SP2, all
works as usual at first. I am offered a choice of place to save,
downloading
seems to begin as normal
but then the saving screen
disappears suddenly and no file has been downloaded. All files seem to be affected.
There
is a background to this. I uninstalled Windows Defender Beta2 and SpyWareblaster recently.
Uninstallation did not go smoothly with Windows
Defender. Sfc /scannow shows no problem. Any ideas? I am familiar with using regedit.

Is reinstalling IE6 using the INF method (I have made a slipstreamed version of XP Pro SP2 and have it on my hard drive) likely to correct
the fault?.

Re: 'save target as' not working properly

Steve

Well well well, faced with basically the same problem, I tried the IEFIX.
Now IE simply refuses to open with the message that it is unable to download from whatever site I am trying to log on to. What's more, my system restore no longer opens properly and I am presented with a blank screen. Thankfully I had installed FIREFOX as a backup to IE thus enabling me to get on the net. Any suggestions to get me out of this?

Thanks,

So....did you read this part as well?
