

microsoft.public.windows.mediacenter: Re: What's the Problem with set-top boxes?

Re: What's the Problem with set-top boxes?

Source:

<http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/Windows/microsoft.public.windows.mediacenter/2004-12/0604.html>

From: Nigel Barker (nigel_at_hp.com)

Date: 12/03/04

Date: Fri, 03 Dec 2004 15:20:40 GMT

On Fri, 3 Dec 2004 04:41:03 -0800, "Gregory" <Gregory@discussions.microsoft.com> wrote:

>Now this is where I get confused. A set-top box has a scart output. Scart >adapters output to composite video or s-video. Some set-top boxes (mine >included) don't output s-video. Where does RGB (component) come into the >picture? I don't know about the US, but UK boxes (at least not the ones I've >seen) don't have component outputs.

We have had RGB here in Europe for quite some years. Component is the US version of it which is a relatively recent introduction at least widely available on consumer products. All Sky digiboxes output RGB on the SCART & I suspect most all UK & European STBs will also give RGB on the SCART as do DVD players.

--

Nigel Barker

Live from the sunny Cote d'Azur