

Re: W2K client logonserver in the wrong site (native w2003 domain)

Re: W2K client logonserver in the wrong site (native w2003 domain)

Source:

http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/Windows/microsoft.public.windows.server.active_directory/2005-04/msg01650

- From: "ptwilliams" <ptw2001@xxxxxxxxxxxx>
 - Date: Tue, 19 Apr 2005 21:14:16 +0100
-

> We have this problem that clients (w2k sp4) in our native windows2003 > domain keep logging on to a domain controller in a different site. The > clients were firstly installed and created in this "wrong" site, and moved > afterwards to a new location (where we also installed a Domain Controller > and Fileserver).

How were they 'moved'

If the site was wrong it should have been reconfigured. Clients will then pickup the new info at next boot (when they perform a lookup).

—

Paul Williams

Microsoft MVP – Windows Server – Directory Services

<http://www.msresource.net> | <http://forums.msresource.net>

• Follow-Ups:

- ◆ Re: W2K client logonserver in the wrong site (native w2003 domain)
◇ From: David Burghgraeve

• References:

- ◆ W2K client logonserver in the wrong site (native w2003 domain)
◇ From: David Burghgraeve
- Prev by Date: RE: Recovery agent for EFS, how can i get it done PLEASE HELP
- Next by Date: Changing domains
- Previous by thread: W2K client logonserver in the wrong site (native w2003 domain)
- Next by thread: Re: W2K client logonserver in the wrong site (native w2003 domain)
- Index(es):
 - ◆ Date

Re: W2K client logonserver in the wrong site (native w2003 domain)

◆ Thread