

Re: Domain vs local logon

Source:

http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/Windows/microsoft.public.windows.server.active_directory/2006-01/msg00899

- From: Andy P <AndyP@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx>
 - Date: Tue, 17 Jan 2006 01:56:02 -0800
-

Thanks to everyone. Issue resolved.

Andy P

"Herb Martin" wrote:

> "Asher_N" <compGuy666@xxxxxxxxxxxxx> wrote in message
> news:Xns9745EBD85675CcompGuy666hotmailcom@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx
> > You use a standard domain user account, and make that domain account a > > member of the local admin group.
> >
> > =?Utf-8?B?QW5keSBQ?=<AndyP@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx> wrote in > > news:F14A415D-C372-439F-AE9E-20516AE2E849@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx:
> >
> >> Thank you for your response. Let me extend it a little further. I have > >> some executives in a company I support that company policy dictates > >> should be administrators of their XP Pro notebooks. They also need > >> user domain accounts (no admin privileges in the Domain). Should I > >> create local accounts with admin level privileges on each notebook, > >> should I use Domain accounts or should I use both?
> >>
> > What Asher says is correct. It may not be a good policy but if > > you want them to be admins (24/7) of their machines make their > > domain account a member of Admins on the XP machine.
> >
> > Alternatively if they should use the privileges RARELY give > > them a separate account and explain that they are to logon with > > the NON-admin Domain account for working and the local > > Admin account ONLY for admin.
> >
> > This way, if they download a virus/trojan it will not automatically > > be an admin.
> >
> >
> > --
> > Herb Martin, MCSE, MVP
> > Accelerated MCSE

Re: Domain vs local logon

- ◆ Date
- ◆ Thread