Ok as I see that this is probably something granted in the delegation of control is there something I can use to show me the current delegation? I don't want to go to far into the wizard as it looks more for assigning than just viewing.

Ok as this domain was built before I came on I was granted control through someone. They set my personal admin account up as a member of the 'domain admin' group.

It appears that I have access to everything else with these accounts but for some reason the unlock checkbox is grayed out.

Our enterprise admin group only has the administrator account in it.

Hello Jamie,

Which account do you mean normal users or maybe enterprise admin accounts? Do you work with the builtin administrator or your own user account? Is it a real domain admin, or did someone give you rights with delegate control?

Best regards

Meinolf Weber

Re: Account control

Ok I'm a new and only domain admin but I have some accounts that I can not unlock when they get locked out.

Can anyone tell me why this is?
