

Re: local group management by Power Users: is there ownership?

Source:

<http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/Windows/microsoft.public.windows.server.general/2004-02/0066.html>

From: myself (tired.of.spam)

Date: 02/18/04

Date: Wed, 18 Feb 2004 22:09:11 +0100

Why not grant r/w permission to the parent directory to a group that both users have in common? Such permissions will be inherited for every file/folder they will create.

--

Check out NeoExec ! [www.neovalens.com]

--

"david.burghgraeve@dolmen.be" <anonymous@discussions.microsoft.com> wrote in message news:11cea01c3f646$84a0f330$a101280a@phx.gbl...

> Hi there,

> I have a question about ownership of local groups on windows2003 servers. I have a situation here and It seems there's not a lot of info about this on the net. Two different users, each one a member of "power users" on a fileserver, manage the local groups. If userA creates a local group on the file server, user B can't modify that group.

>

> So, there's an ownership involved here...

>

> How kan I change the default ownship behaviour? Or is there a way that I can setup a right that the two power users can also manage each-others created groups...

>

> Making them Administrators is not acceptable. They are power users for that reason in the first place!