

Re: Odd quirks with video acceleration

Source:

<http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/Windows/microsoft.public.windows.server.general/2004-09/1920.html>

From: Adam (plato2876_at_gmail.com)

Date: 09/20/04

Date: Mon, 20 Sep 2004 05:03:52 -0700

Arek,

Nope, this isn't a dell preinstalled card, actually, so no dell drivers for it. What's really odd, to me, is that nVidia does offer Server 2k3 64-bit drivers, just not a set for those of us with a puny 32-bit processor, like myself.

-Adam

>-----Original Message-----

>Have you tried to grab video drivers from Dell website? I am not sure if you >will be able to get one for Windows 2003 Server for this model, as I don't >think it was designed to run server OS. But it's worth a try :)

>

>--

>Arek Iskra

>MVP for Windows Server - Software Distribution

>

>

>"Adam" <plato2876@gmail.com> wrote in message

>news:418801c49e97$90e9fac0$a601280a@phx.gbl...

>> While running Windows Server 2003, Enterprise Edition, I've >> run across an odd bug on my setup, that I can't seem to get >> rid of. For some reason, when I enable full video >> acceleration on the system, the video resources on the >> system will essentially run out every 2 and a half days.

>> I'll no longer be able to have any background loaded, nor >> will other visual aspects be able to load properly, >> including "skinned" programs using anything besides the >> standard windows appearance. The system is running on a >> Dell Optiplex GX260, with a GeForce 4 MX 440 video card.

>> As troubleshooting steps, I've attempted swapping out the >> video card, motherboard, ram, and processor, all to no >> avail. The system is currently using the most recent

>> Windows XP drivers from the nVidia website, but the problem >> also exhibits itself with the drivers from windows update, microsoft.public.windows.server.general: Re: Odd quirks with video acceleration >> just with additional quirks.

>>

>> If anyone happens to have any idea on what I can try from >> here, it'd be GREATLY appreciated.

>>

>> Thanks,

>> Adam

>

>

>.

>