

microsoft.public.windows.server.general: Re: CPU Usage spikes to 100% and back to 7%

Re: CPU Usage spikes to 100% and back to 7%

Source:

<http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/Windows/microsoft.public.windows.server.general/2004-11/0301.html>

---

From: Glenn L (the.only(delete)_at_gmail.com)

Date: 11/04/04

Date: Wed, 3 Nov 2004 21:00:46 -0800

It is typically not a problem when a component spikes the CPU and drops off. This behavior is typical of some components like lsass and nothing to worry about.

It is only a problem if you see sustained high CPU utilization from a specific component.

--

Glenn L

CCNA, MCSE (2000,2003) + Security

"cngn" <cngn.1f69vc@DoNotSpam.com> wrote in message

news:cngn.1f69vc@DoNotSpam.com...

>

> You'll need to see which app / process is hogging the CPU at that > specific moment in time, sort the task manager columns by "CPU" and the > mo that specific process hits, the task manager will move it up, then > you can track it from the event viewer if you haven't done so > already....

>

>

> --

> cngnTech-Arena - <http://www.tech-arena.com>

>