

Re: Permissions on system Files and Registry updated at logon

Source:

<http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/Windows/microsoft.public.windows.server.general/2004-11/1466.html>

From: Jerold Schulman (Jerry_at_jsiinc.com)

Date: 11/18/04

Date: Thu, 18 Nov 2004 12:37:30 -0500

On Thu, 18 Nov 2004 09:23:19 -0800, "Tex_Murphy" <Tex_Murphy@discussions.microsoft.com> wrote:

>Hi folks.

>

>My company has a Windows 2000 AD with a lot of security policies in place.

>The previous admin set the policies up in such a way that WinXP will scan the >system folders and certain registry entries during logon, and then re-apply >the pre-defined permissions to them.

>

>Naturally, this makes the login process a really long one (10 minutes long).

>I also heard that this does this several times a day – which means that the >admin placed applied this policy into the group policy.

>

>I ran GPMC and verified that this is happening, but I have no clue as to how

>I can modify these settings in the Group Policy editor. In the GPMC, the >report states that it is under

>Computer Configuration

>Windows Settings

>Security Settings

>File System

>Registry

>

>Any ideas where or how I can see these entries on the group Policy editor?

>And does anyone know how I can make it execute once a month, rather at every >interval?

>

>Any ideas are greatly appreciated!

>Thanks!

>Tex

In GPMC, right-click the policy that contains these settings and press Edit.

Navigate through Computer Configuration Windows Settings Security Settings

Expand File System or Registry to see the settings.

To remove them, right-click and press Delete.

microsoft.public.windows.server.general: Re: Permissions on system Files and Registry updated at logon

Jerold Schulman
Windows: General MVP
JSI, Inc.
<http://www.jsiinc.com>