

Re: Securing a Windows XP Workstation

Source:

<http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/Windows/microsoft.public.windows.server.general/2005-02/0790.html>

From: Kerry Brown (*kerry_at_kdbNOSPAMsystems.c*m*)

Date: 02/08/05

Date: Mon, 7 Feb 2005 22:12:30 -0800

Why not just use EFS to encrypt the private data?

Kerry Brown
KDB Systems

"Cary Kataoka" <caryk@cjr.com> wrote in message news:%23LrPRqZDFHA.1012@TK2MSFTNGP14.phx.gbl...

> Hi.

>

> Tried posting this to the XP group, but did not receive any response, so

> I'm > trying this one.

>

> I am attempting to secure a XP workstation connected to a 2003 Server > based > domain. The workstation (belonging to the CEO) has private information > that > should not be accessible by anyone including the network administrator. I > have disabled remote desktop and have added the key

> System\CurrentControlSet\Services\LanManServer\Parameters\AutoShareWks=0

> to > HKLM. I have also disabled the remote registry service. Further, I have > removed all domain users except for the local user from local users and > groups (specifically, I removed domain admins from the local administrator > group).

>

> I would like some further information: A.) Could these settings be > over-ridden via GPO? B.) Could these settings be modified if remote > network

> profile is being used and the user is logging into different workstations > with the same account?

>

> Thanks in advance for any advice.

>

> Cary Kataoka (caryk@cjr.com)

> CJRK Computer Consulting Inc.

>

microsoft.public.windows.server.general: Re: Securing a Windows XP Workstation

>
>