

Re: Dual Boot Server to get around not knowing passwords

Source:

<http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/Windows/microsoft.public.windows.server.general/2006-01/msg00849.html>

- From: "Pegasus \ (MVP)" <L.can@xxxxxxx>
 - Date: Tue, 17 Jan 2006 14:33:43 +1100
-

"CMITPlano" <CMITPlano@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx> wrote in message <news:6C173A24-5B78-4301-9839-D9477D6E0E2B@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx>

- > We have a customer that does not know their Domain Admin or Local Admin
- > Passwords (the previous computer guy is holding them hostage) on a Windows
- > Small Business Server 2003. We have been debating the idea of installing
- a
- > second bootable version of SBS 2003 (in a different Windows directory) so
- we
- > can gain access to the data, programs and Exchange Server.
- >
- > Will this work? What are the potential problems? Is there an easier way
- to
- > get around not knowing the passwords??

After fixing this problem with the tool suggested by Dave Patrick, have an earnest talk with your client. By not signing a mutual agreement about them having full access to their server at all times, they allowed themselves to be held over a barrel.

.

- Prev by Date: Re: Dual Boot Server to get around not knowing passwords
- Next by Date: Re: Duplicate / Replicate data to offsite server
- Previous by thread: Re: Dual Boot Server to get around not knowing passwords
- Next by thread: Re: Dual Boot Server to get around not knowing passwords
- Index(es):
 - ◆ Date
 - ◆ Thread