

Re: Pass through authentication problem

Source:

<http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/Windows/microsoft.public.windows.server.migration/2004-06/0695.html>

From: Erik Ableson (Erik.Ableson_at_OZITEM.COM)

Date: 06/28/04

Date: Mon, 28 Jun 2004 09:51:06 +0200

Hmm – this is similar to some of the problems I'm currently having. People that have shortcuts to resources on the old domain are prompted to authenticate even though the following has been set up:

Bi directional trust
SID Filtering disabled

Migrated account accessing a resource in the old domain via a shortcut. The bulk of my problems appears to be related to incomplete resolution of rights that should be accessible via their SID history.

Erik

On 25/06/04 15:44, in article kFqeqprWEHA.304@cpsftngxa10.phx.gbl, "Bob Qin [MSFT]" <bobqin@online.microsoft.com> wrote:

- > It is not same for the domain user account and local user account. For the
- > local user account, the information is saved on each computer individually.
- > Windows 2000/XP will validate user account locally not from the remote
- > computer. It will first check if there is same local user, then if the
- > password is same. If the password is not same, then it will not connect.
- >
- > As for domain user, the information is saved in the AD database and it need
- > to contact DC for authentication, so it is unique in the whole domain.
- >
- > So you can add a local user on the member server and assign same password
- > as on the client.
- >
- > Please refer to the following article.
- >
- > 258938 Network Clients Prompted for Password Connecting to Share on Windows
- > <http://support.microsoft.com/?id=258938>